I. INTRODUCTION

1 Plaintiffs are young Washingtonians who seek safety and stability after suffering abuse, 2 neglect, or abandonment by their parents. Since 1990, Congress has afforded a path to legal 3 status for young people whose parents cannot care for them, and whose best interests would be 4 harmed by a return to their home country. 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(27)(J).

6 Although Congress explicitly vested state courts with the responsibility to establish the 7 factual bases of Special Immigrant Juvenile Status (SIJS), see 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(27)(J)(i)-(ii), 8 in 2018, U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) adopted a policy of refusing to 9 recognize findings of state courts if the court does not have the authority to return the youth to 10 the custody of a parent. See Declaration of Sydney Maltese (Maltese Decl.), ECF No. 4; Ex. A 11 at 9, ECF No. 4-1; Ex. B at 1, ECF No. 4-2; Ex. C at 2-3, ECF No. 4-3.¹ USCIS’s new policy—
 12 issued without notice or comment—frustrates our state Legislature’s work to protect the welfare 13 of young Washingtonians and undermines the authority of our state courts in a quintessential
 14 area of state expertise. The Court should join two other federal courts and enjoin USCIS’s 15 unlawful policy as applied to Washington youth. See Opinion and Order, M. v. Nielsen, No. 1:18-16 cv-05068-JGK, 3 (S.D.N.Y. March 15, 2019), ECF No. 119 (“[USCIS]’s conclusion that family 17 courts in New York do not have authority to make custody determinations is based on a 18 misunderstanding of New York State law”); J.L. v. Cissna, 341 F. Supp. 3d 1048, 1059 (N.D.
 19 Cal. 2018) (enjoining USCIS from applying its new policy in California and recognizing that 20 California law “unambiguously grants its probate courts with such jurisdiction” to make the 21 required SIJS findings) (citing Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 155(a)(1), and Cal. Prob. Code § 1510.1).

23 ¹ As a practical matter, Washington wonders how USCIS’s policy applies to youth—of any age—who 24 have no parents. For children whose parents’ rights have been terminated, see Wash. Rev. Code § 13.34.210, or 25 those whose parents are deceased, there exists no parent for a court to consider returning the child to. On its face, 26 USCIS’s policy appears to preclude any of these children from being granted SIJS, regardless of the clear non-viability of parent reunification and whether they have experienced abuse, neglect, or abandonment. This is an issue that Washington likely would have raised during a notice and comment period, if USCIS had followed the required process. See Complaint ¶¶ 95-100, ECF No. 1.

II. IDENTITY AND INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

The State of Washington submits this amicus brief to ensure that its vulnerable youth have access to the humanitarian relief expressly created by Congress. As the legal adviser to the State of Washington, see Wash. Rev. Code § 43.10.030, the Attorney General’s constitutional and statutory powers include the submission of amicus briefs on matters that affect the public interest. See Young Ams. for Freedom v. Gorton, 588 P.2d 195, 200 (Wash. 1978); City of Seattle v. McKenna, 259 P.3d 1087, 1091-92 (Wash. 2011) (Washington Attorney General’s “powers and duties” include “discretionary authority to act in any court, state or federal, trial or appellate, on a matter of public concern”) (internal quotation marks omitted).

The State of Washington has a strong interest in the welfare of its vulnerable youth, including their ability to apply for SIJS. See In re Sumey, 621 P.2d 108, 111 (Wash. 1980) (recognizing the State’s interest in “protecting the physical and mental health of the child”); Wash. Rev. Code § 13.90.901(1)(d) (specifically vesting state courts with jurisdiction to make the factual findings necessary for vulnerable youth to petition for SIJS). Congress expressly recognizes the State of Washington’s interest in the welfare of its children, and in SIJS eligibility specifically, by deferring to state court determinations regarding an immigrant youth’s best interests. See 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(27)(J)(i)-(ii).

III. ARGUMENT

Washington law authorizes state courts to determine the appropriate custody for youth through the age of twenty-one. See e.g., Wash. Rev. Code § 13.90.900. Under Washington dependency law, the definition of “child,” “juvenile,” and “youth” includes “[a]ny individual age eighteen to twenty-one years who is eligible to receive and who elects to receive the extended foster care services.” Wash. Rev. Code § 13.34.030(2). As such, Washington’s juvenile courts routinely make ongoing placement decisions for youth after they turn eighteen. See, e.g., Wash. Rev. Code § 13.34.267.

1 In discharging their duty to oversee the welfare of Washington’s most vulnerable youth, 2 Washington courts statewide routinely consider and issue SIJS findings. Cf. Findings and Order
 3 Regarding Eligibility for Special Immigrant Juvenile Status (FOSIJS), JU 11.0500 (June 2018),

 5 %20Eligibility%20for%20Special%20Immigrant%20Juvenile%20Status.doc, (last visited 6 March 25, 2019) (providing courts a form order for issuing SIJS findings); see also, e.g., Maltese 7 Decl. ¶ 5, ECF No. 4; Ex. D, ECF No. 4-4; Ex. H, ECF No. 4-8; Ex. K, ECF No. 4-11.

8 The SIJS statute requires USCIS to defer to these state court determinations. 8 U.S.C.
 9 § 1101(a)(27)(J)(i)-(ii) (authorizing SIJS for youth “declared dependent on a juvenile court . . .
 10 or whom such a court has . . . placed under the custody of an agency or department of a State, or 11 an individual or entity appointed by a State or juvenile court”); see also J.L. v. Cissna, 341 F.
 12 Supp. 3d 1048, 1061-62 (N.D. Cal. 2018) (“Congress appropriately reserved for state courts the 13 power to make child welfare decisions, an area of traditional state concern and expertise.”) 14 (citing Perez-Olano v. Gonzalez, 248 F.R.D. 248, 265 (C.D. Cal. 2008)).² By reserving these 15 fact-specific findings for state courts and including other “bases found under State law” wherein 16 reunification with a parent is not viable, 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(27)(J)(i), Congress properly 17 acknowledges the expertise of our state courts over issues of child welfare. See, e.g., 18 Ankenbrandt v. Richards, 504 U.S. 689, 704 (1992) (“[A]s a matter of judicial expertise, it makes 19 far more sense to retain the rule that federal courts lack power to issue [divorce, alimony, and 20 child custody] decrees because of the special proficiency developed by state tribunals over the 21 past century and a half in handling issues that arise in the granting of such decrees.”); Ex parte 22 Burrus, 136 U.S. 586, 593-94 (1890) (“The whole subject of the domestic relations of husband 23 and wife, parent and child, belongs to the laws of the states, and not to the laws of the United 24

25 ² Indeed, the “evidence accompanying a SIJ[S] petition only needs to ‘establish that the juvenile court 26 based its decision, including whether or not it has jurisdiction to issue the order, on state law rather than federal immigration law.” J.L. v. Cissna, 341 F. Supp. 3d at 1061 (citing USCIS Consolidated Handbook of Adjudication Procedures, Vol. 6, 7 (April 30, 2018), ECF No. 34-10).

1 States.”); Mac Donald v. Mac Donald, 755 F.2d 715, 717 (9th Cir. 1985) (“It is appropriate for 2 bankruptcy courts to avoid incursions into family law matters ‘out of consideration of . . .
 3 deference to our state court brethren and their established expertise in such matters.’”) (citing In 4 re Graham, 14 B.R. 246, 248 (Bankr. W.D.Ky. 1981)).

5 Notwithstanding Congress’s clear command of deference to state courts, USCIS adopted 6 a policy that not only contravenes federal law, but also interferes with the ability of Washington 7 courts to employ their considerable expertise and protect the welfare of Washington youth. The 8 policy should be enjoined.

9 A. Washington Courts Routinely Exercise Jurisdiction Over Youth Through Age
 10 Twenty-One

11 The jurisdiction of Washington’s juvenile courts has long extended to youth older than 12 eighteen. See, e.g., Delinquent Juveniles—Jurisdiction Beyond Eighteenth and Twenty-First 13 Birthdays, 1975 Wash. Sess. Laws 574-75.³ Longstanding Washington laws cover youth 14 between eighteen and twenty-one, as demonstrated in the following two ways.

15 First, Washington’s Department of Children, Youth, and Families (DCYF) operates an 16 extended foster care (EFC) program that authorizes the juvenile court to maintain jurisdiction 17 over dependent youth between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one. Wash. Rev. Code 18 § 13.34.267. Only youth between eighteen and twenty-one are eligible for EFC. Id. The purpose 19 of EFC is “to promote permanency and positive outcomes” for youth otherwise at increased risk 20 of “poor outcomes in a variety of areas, including limited human capital upon which to build 21 economic security and inability to fully take advantage of secondary and postsecondary 22 educational opportunities, untreated mental or behavioral health problems, involvement in the 23 criminal justice and corrections systems, and early parenthood combined with second-generation 24 child welfare involvement.” See Findings—2013 c 332 in Wash. Rev. Code § 13.34.267. By 25 continuing to deliver case management and placement services for youth beyond the age of 26 ³<http://leg.wa.gov/CodeReviser/documents/sessionlaw/1975ex1c170.pdf> (last visited March 25, 2019).

1 | eighteen, Washington maximizes a young person’s access to assistance in meeting basic needs
 2 | and eligibility for court-ordered services for finding stable placement, pursuing secondary
 3 | education, developing job skills, and accessing medical and mental health treatment. Wash. Rev.
 4 | Code §§ 13.34.030(9), 13.34.267, 13.90.040; Wash. Rev. Code § 74.13.031(16); Wash. Admin.
 5 | Code § 110-90-0150. As part of EFC, Washington courts make the findings necessary for an
 6 | immigrant youth to pursue SIJS classification. See Wash. Rev. Code § 13.34.267(1), (5), (7).

7 | Second, Washington’s juvenile court maintains jurisdiction over youth ages eighteen to 8 | twenty-one through the juvenile justice system. Washington’s juvenile courts may extend their
 9 | jurisdiction over youth, if, prior to the youth’s eighteenth birthday, (1) juvenile offender or adult
 10 | criminal proceedings are pending, or (2) an automatic extension is necessary for disposition, or
 11 | sentence, to be imposed or enforced, Wash. Rev. Code § 13.40.300(3). Under state law, juveniles
 12 | in custody may be released only to a “responsible adult” or Washington’s Department of Social and 13 | Health Services (DSHS). Wash. Rev. Code § 13.40.040(5). The juvenile court has authority to
 14 | commit a juvenile to DSHS for placement in a juvenile facility up to the youth’s twenty-first
 15 | birthday. See Wash. Rev. Code § 13.40.300(1). When a juvenile is committed to DSHS, the court’s
 16 | jurisdiction automatically extends such that the court may impose conditions for release up until 17 | the age of twenty-one, and sometimes until age twenty-five, depending on the nature of the 18 | juvenile offense. Wash. Rev. Code § 13.40.300(3)(c). When committing juveniles to DSHS under
 19 | these provisions, Washington courts can and do enter findings that serve as the predicate for SIJS
 20 | status. See, e.g., Maltese Decl. ¶ 5, ECF No. 4, Ex. D, ECF No. 4-4.

21 | B. USCIS’s Policy Frustrates the Washington Legislature’s Work to Align State Law
 22 | with Federal Law

23 | In addition to EFC and juvenile justice jurisdiction, the Washington Legislature recently
 24 | provided youth with a third avenue to access state courts in order to obtain the predicate findings
 25 | for SIJS. In 2017, the Legislature established the Vulnerable Youth Guardianship (VYG)
 26 | program for eighteen to twenty-one-year olds. See Wash. Rev. Code § 13.90.900. The VYG

1 program expanded the juvenile court’s jurisdiction by allowing vulnerable youth to consent to 2 state-appointed guardianship as a means to eliminate human trafficking, prevent youth 3 victimization, decrease reliance on public resources, reduce youth homelessness, and offer 4 protection for youth who may otherwise be targets for traffickers. Id.

5 In creating the VYG program, the Legislature’s explicit purpose was to address barriers
 6 to SIJS due to “misalignment between state and federal law.” Wash. Rev. Code 7 § 13.90.901(1)(d). Under federal immigration law, SIJS is available to youth until the age of 8 twenty-one. See 8 U.S.C. § 1101(b)(1) (defining “child,” for purposes including SIJS, as “an 9 unmarried person under twenty-one years of age”). Prior to 2017, however, Washington youth 10 between eighteen and twenty-one years old who were not already under the jurisdiction of a 11 juvenile court were largely unable to petition Washington courts for SIJS required findings 12 because they were unable to initiate a new juvenile court proceeding once they turned eighteen.
 13 Wash. Rev. Code § 13.90.901(1)(d). Through the VYG program, the Legislature intentionally 14 “[o]pen[ed] court doors” so all vulnerable Washington youth under the age of twenty-one could 15 access the benefits of SIJS. Wash. Rev. Code § 13.90.900; see also Wash. Rev. Code 16 § 13.90.901(1)(a) (extending juvenile court jurisdiction for “judicial determinations regarding 17 the custody and care of youth” and the findings necessary for a youth to petition for SIJS).
 18 Through the VYG program, the state Legislature aligned Washington law with federal 19 immigration law and achieved two beneficial results: it gave greater effect to the scope of 20 humanitarian relief intended by Congress, while also furthering Washington’s duty to support 21 and protect vulnerable young people in our state.

22 C. USCIS’s Policy Disregards Washington Courts’ Expertise in Making Child Welfare
 23 Determinations

24 USCIS’s new policy fails to recognize Washington courts’ expertise in making welfare 25 determinations for young Washingtonians, including those who have reached the age of legal 26 majority. Washington’s juvenile courts have exclusive original jurisdiction over all dependency,

1 out-of-home placement, and juvenile offender related proceedings. Wash. Rev. Code 2 § 13.04.030(1).

3 In determining whether a youth is dependent, Washington courts consider whether the 4 youth has been sexually abused or exploited, injured, negligently treated, and whether parents 5 have foregone their parenting responsibilities for an extended period of time. See Wash. Rev.
6 Code § 26.44.020(1); Wash. Rev. Code §§ 13.34.030(1), (6). In doing so, Washington courts 7 “have broad discretion and considerable flexibility to receive and evaluate all relevant evidence 8 in reaching a decision that recognizes both the welfare of the child and parental rights.” In re
9 Dependency of Schermer, 169 P.3d 452, 465 (Wash. 2007) (quoting In re Welfare of Becker, 553 10 P.2d 1339, 1343 (Wash. 1976)). In making placement decisions, state courts make fact-based 11 determinations about youth health, safety and welfare. Wash. Rev. Code §§ 13.34.060, .130(1), 12 .138(2).

13 Likewise, in decisions over custody, placement, and guardianship, Washington’s 14 juvenile courts consider circumstance-specific facts to determine what is in youths’ best 15 interests. Wash. Rev. Code §§ 13.34.060(2), .136; Wash. Rev. Code § 13.90.030(2)(b); see also 16 In re R.W., 177 P.3d 186, 188 (Wash. Ct. App. 2008) (in determining appropriate placement, the 17 child’s best interests are the court’s primary concern) (citing In re Dependency of J.B.S., 863 P.2d 18 1344, 1349 (Wash. 1993)). For example, Washington courts look to factors like the youth’s 19 wishes, psychological and emotional bonds with potential caregivers and siblings, concerns 20 raised by the youth’s court appointed advocate, developmental and emotional needs, cultural 21 heritage, and ties to a particular community or location. See Wash. Rev. Code §§ 13.34.025, 22 .120, .267; see also, e.g., In re Dependency of J.B.S., 863 P.2d at 1349-50; In re Aschauer, 611 23 P.2d 1245, 1249 (Wash. 1980). “With regard to sibling relationships, Washington courts prioritize 24 placement with siblings because the state Legislature “presumes that nurturing the existing 25 sibling relationships is in the best interest of a child, in particular in those situations where a 26 child cannot be with their parents, guardians, or legal custodians as a result of court intervention.”

1 Intent—2002 c 52 in Wash. Rev. Code § 13.34.025; see also, e.g., Wash. Rev. Code
2 § 13.34.130(1)(b)(iii) (DCYF may consider placing a child “with a person with whom the child's 3 sibling or half-sibling is residing or a person who has adopted the sibling or half-sibling of the 4 child being placed,” “subject to review and approval by the court”).

5 All of this goes to show that Washington courts are highly capable of making the 6 necessary factual determinations for SIJS eligibility. In fact, Washington courts have relied on 7 Congress’s explicit deference to state courts and developed careful guidance as to how to 8 consider evidence and issue findings on the factual requirements for SIJS. In 2013, two 9 Washington State Supreme Court Commissions issued a joint resource guide for judges with 10 information specific to SIJS. See Wash. State Supreme Court Gender & Justice Comm’n &
11 Minority & Justice Comm’n, Immigration Resource Guide For Judges, 8-12 (July 2013), 12 <http://www.courts.wa.gov/content/manuals/Immigration/ImmigrationResourceGuide.pdf>, (last 13 visited March 25, 2019). The guide recognizes that juvenile courts “play an integral part in 14 establishing a child’s eligibility for SIJS classification.” Id. (citing 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(27)(J)(i); 15 8 C.F.R. § 204.11(a)).

16 In short, USCIS’s rejection of SIJS findings for youth over eighteen ignores the authority
17 and expertise of our state courts, and dismisses the seriousness and care with which Washington 18 judges approach SIJS findings. Accord Perez-Olano v. Gonzales, 248 F.R.D. 248, 265 (C.D. Cal.
19 2008) (“[B]y limiting the specific consent requirement to custody and placement decisions, 20 Congress appropriately reserved for state courts the power to make child welfare decisions, an 21 area of traditional state concern and expertise.”). USCIS should be ordered to comply with

IV. CONCLUSION

The Court should grant Plaintiffs’ requested injunction and reaffirm the longstanding and congressionally mandated role of Washington courts in making important welfare determinations for Washington’s young immigrants.

Dated this 25th day of March, 2019.

Respectfully submitted,

BOB FERGUSON
Attorney General of Washington
